Central

Community College

December 2009

Dear Friends,

By any measure, 2008–09 was a very successful year for Central Carolina Community College. We can be proud of our many academic achievements and innovative initiatives during this tough economic time, a few of which are highlighted in this report.

Today's problems are not easy to fix. Yet, while we face significant economic challenges, we are also focused on the essential role the college plays in solving them. Education and innovation are the key drivers of economic growth. That's what we do. Our community and region rely on us to provide an educated workforce that can produce new ideas and services that will fuel the economy.

These achievements can only happen with extraordinary support. This year the college has benefited from the winning combination of energized faculty, staff and students, engaged community and business leaders, and a Board of Trustees and Foundation Board committed to learning and student success. All of you have made my first year as president of Central Carolina Community College a memorable one.

More than any other institution, Central Carolina Community College has the capability to make a large and lasting difference in individual lives within a relatively short period of time, as well as an enduring, beneficial difference in our communities and our state.

In this publication I invite you to join us for a brief tour of the year's highlights, as we celebrate the college's many accomplishments and the academic successes of our students.

The stories you will read in these pages reach forward into the current year and beyond. Like the college itself, they are oriented toward the future. They illustrate ongoing goals, commitments, ways of working, and relationships.

It is an honor for us to list and publicly acknowledge our generous donors and supporters. Thank you for your support of our college, our students, and our community. I look forward to working with you in the year ahead.

With warm regards,

Dr. T. Eston "Bud" Marchant,
President
Central Carolina
Community College

"This is an exciting day, my favorite of the academic calendar," College President Dr. Bud Marchant said. "This is the realization of these people's dreams and aspirations. It's something they have worked hard for and their families have worked hard for. It's the start to a whole new life."

Spring enrollment sets record

Central Carolina Community College's spring semester 2009 curriculum enrollment hit an all-time high of 4,645 students. The previous spring record was 2007, with 4,474 enrolled.

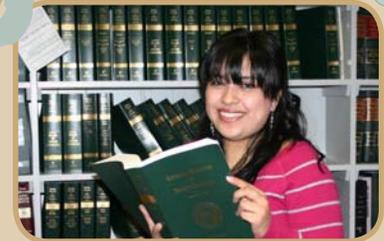

The college attributed the increase in large part to the recession, which continued to deepen in the local area, North Carolina, the nation, and even globally. Companies were down-sizing or closing and workers were told they no longer had a job. Laid-off workers, as well as those hoping to stay employed by learning new job skills, enrolled in increasing numbers.

"I would say to anyone who's been laid off or is looking for job skills, 'Come on back to school,'" said Steve Lympany, chairman of the college's Engineering Technologies Department. "Our faculty is well aware of the lack of confidence and anxiety unemployed people deal with. Some folks have not been in a class for 20 years. Our job is to ensure student success."

Part of the curriculum enrollment increase was students in the college's university transfer program. Concerned about the cost of four-year tuition, room, and board, more took advantage of the quality education provided in their own communities at a fraction of the cost.

Central Carolina Community College nursing students practice on a medical mannequin to learn skills in checking patients' vital signs. Enrollment is up in many high-demand occupations, such as nursing.

Creating Success

Nallely Vazquez has her sights set on becoming a lawyer – that's why she enrolled at CCCC.

"Central Carolina is the smartest way to start to become a lawyer," Nallely said. "It's cost efficient, the classes transfer to the university, you have a relationship with the teachers, and the paralegal program has internships, so you see what field of law you like."

Nallely earned her A.A.S. in Paralegal Technology and was hired by a law firm. She is getting her Associate in Arts and will transfer to N.C. State University for her bachelor's degree. From there, law school awaits.

A leader in “greening” America

The United States is taking on an ever-deepening green hue – “green” as in Earth-friendly farming, energy production, and construction. Green is spreading and growing, even into areas such as tourism and culinary arts.

Central Carolina Community College knows about green. Its nickname is “Green Central” because sustainability programs have been front-and-center in its planning for a long time:

- In 2002, CCCC became the first community college in the nation to offer an Associate in Applied Science degree in Sustainable Agriculture.
- Central Carolina was the first – and still is the only – community college in North Carolina offering an A.A.S. in Alternative Energy Technology: Biofuels. Even university programs don’t have the workforce-training aspect CCCC offers.
- Central Carolina’s green building and renewable energy program has the only NABCEP-approved solar PV panel installation course at a N.C. community college.
- Central Carolina is a leader in responding to the greening of traditional career fields, including ecotourism and a “natural chef” culinary arts program.
- New buildings under construction at the Chatham County Campus and Siler City Center will meet the high energy efficiency LEED standards of the U.S. Green Building Council.

Student Mary Beth Bardin plucks out weeds from the arugula crop growing in the plastic-walled hoop house at the college’s 15-acre student farm, part of the college’s sustainable agriculture program.

Creating Success

Rachel Burton believes in clean, renewable energy sources. At CCCC, she earned both an A.A.S. in Automotive Technology and a certificate in Sustainable Agriculture.

Combining these interests, she helped teach the college’s first biodiesel fuel class. That class led to the creation of the college’s biofuels associate degree program. She serves on the advisory board. Rachel is also co-founder of Piedmont Biofuels Industrial.

“Central Carolina fosters an environment for innovative thinking with a hands-on learning approach,” she said. “These were the tools I needed to explore my interests in renewable energy.”

College performers wow audiences with "Kudzu" musical

A beloved cartoon character – and all his colorful townsfolk – came to life when Central Carolina Community College theater production students and community members presented "Kudzu, A Southern Musical" at Chatham Mills. The tuneful, happy show about Southern small town life delighted audiences.

"Kudzu" was the latest in a series of high-quality, acclaimed performances by students in instructor Ellen Bland's theater arts classes at the Chatham Campus.

The successful performances started with "Millworker" in 2003, a musical based on oral histories from Depression-era mill town residents. The Raleigh News & Observer acclaimed it as one of the top 10 Triangle shows of 2003. The N.C. Museum of Art selected it as its inaugural production. The show received the N.C. State Theatre Award for Community Theatre.

Since then, there has been one success after another: "One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest," "Dreamland," "We Regret to Inform You," "Back County Crimes," and "Kudzu, A Southern Musical." All have played to sell-out crowds and positive reviews.

The college's theater program has been an important contributor to the cultural life of the communities it reaches.

The college's theater students and community members performed the tuneful, happy show, "Kudzu, A Southern Musical," based on the beloved 'Kudzu' cartoon strip, at Chatham Mills.

Telephone Pioneers

The Durham Chapter of the Triangle Telephone Pioneers of America endowed two scholarships for students at the college's N.C. School of Telecommunications. The scholarships are in memory of former organization presidents Claude Sykes and Rassie Wynne, both deceased. Pioneers members Brian Leach, Walter Bugel, and Mike Shearl toured the facility and presented a check to fund the endowment. Pictured are (from left) Leach; Bugel; Kelly Dehring, NCST administrative assistant; and Ben Johnson, lead instructor for Networking Technologies and Telecommunications. Also at the presentation were Diane Glover, executive director of the CCCC Foundation, and Joe Lawrence, an officer of the N.C. Triangle Pioneers.

CCCC—NCSU start first community college Confucius Classroom in nation

Or, in English, "Hello, nice to meet you."

That phrase – and more – of the Mandarin Chinese language is heard in Central Carolina Community College's Confucius Classroom.

In April 2009, the college signed a memorandum of understanding with North Carolina State University's Confucius Institute to establish a Confucius Classroom at the college. N.C. State is the first university in the nation to have this type of partnership with a community college. Central Carolina is the first community college in the nation to have a Confucius Classroom.

The Classroom enables the college to offer both continuing education and curriculum classes in Chinese language and culture taught by an instructor from China. They are open to college and high school students, business people, and the general public. As part of the Classroom, visitors and businessmen from China will speak to students, participate in cultural activities, and visit local businesses.

The goal of the Confucius Classroom is to educate people for the global economy, increase mutual understanding of American and Chinese cultures, and benefit trade and investment between China and North Carolina.

North Carolina State University's Confucius Institute (pictured) and Central Carolina Community College have established a Confucius Classroom at the college, where students learn Chinese language and culture.

Creating Success

After 31 years in the textile industry, Helen Cotton was laid off. In her mid-fifties, with no high school diploma and no other job skills, she decided to enroll in CCCC's Basic Skills program and earn her G.E.D. diploma.

Helen became an enthusiastic promoter of going back to school. The Basic Skills Department hired her as a recruiter.

"People who've been laid off or never completed high school come in uncertain and frightened about the future," she said. "When I tell them I started my education in Basic Skills, their eyes light up. It gives them hope."

CCCC celebrates 46th spring commencement

Jubilation reigned as the Class of 2009 moved the tassels on their mortarboards from the right side to the left, symbolically signaling their graduation.

Family and friends filled the Dennis A. Wicker Civic Center for the spring graduation. As the tassels were moved, the crowd cheered enthusiastically, waving flowers and balloons for the graduates while cameras snapped and flashed all around the hall.

The graduating students had walked into the ceremony wearing expressions of happiness and relief, tinged for some with a shade of disbelief. They walked out with heads held high, beaming smiles of pride and hard-won achievement.

The graduation was a particularly special day for the college because the first classes in its dental hygiene and latent evidence programs graduated. In total, graduates had completed their studies for 284 Associate in Arts, Associate in Science, and Associate in Applied Science degrees, as well as 107 diplomas and 348 certificates.

Many of the students already had jobs or were going directly into the workforce. Others were headed to four-year colleges or universities, pleased that their degrees had earned them the rank of junior at most institutions.

W.B. Wicker Scholarship

The college's Adult High School/G.E.D. program held its commencement exercises Jan. 29, 2009, at the Civic Center. Among the graduates was Sim Montae Spears, who received his high school diploma.

Spears was all smiles as he also accepted the $1,000 W.B. Wicker Scholarship from Dr. Lisa Chapman, the college's Vice President of Academic Affairs. The scholarship, awarded through the CCCC Foundation, enabled Spears to continue his education at CCCC.

The scholarship is named in honor of W.B. Wicker, the first principal of Lee County Training School, later called Lee High School.

ESTC impacts local safety and economy

When mayhem on the highway took place at the college's Emergency Services Training Center, dozens of firefighters and rescue personnel jumped to the rescue. They lifted tractor-trailers, concrete trucks, and other heavy vehicles off smaller ones.

There were no injuries. In fact, there were no drivers or passengers. Each collision was a realistic training scenario of "Big Lift University," one of many training opportunities offered to emergency services personnel at the ESTC.

Since it opened in 2001, the center has provided on-site training for more than 9,000 emergency services personnel. That is in addition to its off-site programs, which have trained more than 75,000 students.

The ESTC has grown to 116 acres, providing ample space for training scenarios. It has been called the finest training facility in the nation.

The ESTC's programs provide another important benefit – an economic one. When out-of-area emergency services personnel come for training, they stay in local motels, buy gas and other supplies, and eat in local restaurants. Rentals to outside groups, such as car clubs, also attract large numbers of people from out of the area, adding to the economy while they are here.

Firefighters from several states train during an accident scenario at the "Big Lift U" at the Emergency Services Training Center. The Center provides critical training for emergency responders.

HCI Furniture Auction

Joe Giles and his son, Michael, load a porch rocker onto their trailer following the eighth annual Central Carolina Community College Foundation Furniture Auction June 6, 2009, at the Harnett County Campus.

An enthusiastic crowd of bidders paid more than $19,000 for the 100-plus handmade wood and metal furnishings that were auctioned off. Inmate students in the college's carpentry and welding classes at Harnett Correctional Institution made all of them. Each year, their work is auctioned off and the proceeds put into a scholarship endowment for Harnett County students at the college.

"It's a good cause and great prices," said Michael Giles.

Ingram establishes scholarship endowment

Richard Clay Ingram toured the welding shop at Central Carolina Community College in Summer 2009. The sights and sounds brought back memories.

Ingram, whose family owned the Sanford Coca Cola Bottling Company from 1907 to 2009, was a welding student at the college back in the 1970s. He said he used the welding skills he gained at work at the bottling plant. He also enjoyed using them as a hobby, building things such as barbecue grills.

He was back at the college to establish the Richard Clay Ingram Scholarship Endowment with the CCCC Foundation. The endowment will benefit students in Industrial Systems Technology programs, which include an IST degree and certificates in areas such as bio-maintenance, electrical controls, programmable logic, and welding. The endowment will provide an annual scholarship to an IST student.

“Creating the endowment seemed like the thing to do,” Ingram said. “I got my start at the college. It had a lot to do with the way I shaped my life, the type of job I had. It was a good place to start in life. It helped to mold me over the years. It’s a good place to be.”

Frances Warner Scholarship

The children of Frances Frye Roberts Warner established an endowed scholarship for Dental Hygiene in honor of their mother’s long-standing commitment to the college. Frances Warner (right) has served on the college’s Board of Trustees since 1999. Frances is the retired postmaster of Lemon Springs.

Teresa Morrison (center) was the recipient of the first Frances Frye Roberts Warner Scholarship for Dental Hygiene.

College exceeds state performance standards

Educational achievement at Central Carolina Community College exceeds all standards set by the North Carolina State Board of Community Colleges, according to the 2009 Performance Funding Measures Report. That report is part of the Critical Success Factors Report released by the board.

Each of the 58 colleges in the North Carolina Community College System has the challenge of meeting or exceeding standards set for eight performance measures adopted by the board. These are core indicators of student success: Progress of Basic Skills Students; Passing Rates on Licensure & Certification Examinations; Performance of College Transfer Students; Passing Rates of Students in Developmental Courses; Success Rate of Developmental Students in Subsequent College-level Courses; Satisfaction of Completers and Non-completers; Curriculum Student Retention, Graduation, and Transfer; and Client Satisfaction with Customized Training.

Central Carolina was one of only 26 of the state's 58 community colleges that met or exceeded all of the standards.

"We are pleased that we exceeded all the state standards and congratulate all those involved in this success," said President Bud Marchant. "These scores are a clear indicator of the quality of our academic programs."

Upchurch Scholarship

Avron and Mary Upchurch have established an endowed scholarship as "another way to serve people who have a need."

Avron joined the Lee County Industrial Education Center, the forerunner of CCCC, in 1962 as Coordinator of Agricultural Technology. He retired in 1994 as executive vice president and chief academic officer.

After retiring, Avron wrote A History of Central Carolina Community College: The First Forty Years, which was published in 2007. He also served for several years on the Foundation Board.

His wife, Mary, retired as an officer with Southern National Bank. She has served as Sanford Woman's Club treasurer for many years.

CCCC Foundation Golf Classic a winner

The Central Carolina Community College Foundation's 19th Annual Golf Classic at Quail Ridge Golf Course in September 2008 attracted a large crowd of golfers for a great cause. The Golf Classic is the Foundation's largest fundraiser.

Local businesses, industries, and organizations sponsored 142 players in foursomes for the competition. The golfers turned out for a day of relaxing fun and fellowship, ready to give a boost to a good cause. Two tournaments were held: Captain's Choice in the morning and Best Ball in the afternoon.

"Those playing had a great time and helped to raise funds for a wonderful community cause: education," said Diane Glover, Foundation executive director.

More than $30,000 was netted from the event. In the last four years, the Golf Classic has netted more than $100,000.

The funds are used primarily to provide scholarships for students taking classes at the college's campuses or centers in Chatham, Harnett, and Lee counties or by distance education. More than 200 are assisted each year. The proceeds also help to fund summer technology camps for youth and faculty training.

The foundation oversees more than $2.9 million in endowed and program funds.

About 140 golfers turned out for CCCC Foundation's Golf Classic in November 2008. A group of them practices their putting before heading out to the links at Quail Ridge Golf Course.

Creating Success

Timothy Parker enjoys his clinical experiences as a student in Central Carolina Community College's Associate Degree Nursing program.

"Nursing is not just a job, it's a career," he said. "It has become a passion. I can't see myself doing anything else."

He said the training he is receiving in the A.D.N. program is second to none.

"The nursing staff pass on their passion for nursing," Timothy said. "They teach from the textbook, but also bring clinical backgrounds to their work. They know how hospitals run, what kinds of illnesses are out there. They're concerned about their students' success."

Vision fulfilled in opening of West Harnett Center

Harnett County and Central Carolina Community College had a vision: a college center in western Harnett to serve the educational needs of residents and businesses there.

On November 23, 2008, they celebrated the fulfillment of that vision. The West Harnett Center, located in the Western Harnett Industrial Park, is the college's first permanent facility in western Harnett.

The 8,500-square-foot building houses the barbering program, a welding shop, computer lab, classrooms, and space for workforce development.

The open house brought together county commissioners, college trustees and administrators, representatives from the Harnett Forward Together Committee, Harnett Economic Development Commission, and the public to celebrate the new Center. All see it as a catalyst for economic growth, for workforce training, and for the education of residents in the area.

The Harnett Forward Together Committee donated the 15-acre site for the Center. Construction was funded by $1 million from the 2000 state bond referendum, a $647,620 grant from the N.C. Community College System, and $325,200 in county funding.

The college's new West Harnett Center opened with a ribbon cutting on Nov. 23, 2008. Taking part were (from left) the Rev. George Walton, of Olivia Presbyterian Church, who gave the invocation; Harnett County Commissioner Dan Andrews; CCCC President Bud Marchant; Teddy Byrd (behind Marchant), chairman of the Harnett Board of Commissioners; commissioners Beatrice Bailey Hill and Tim McNeill; Bobby Powell, chairman of the board of trustees; and Bill Tyson, Harnett County provost.

Creating Success

After six years of active duty with the U.S. Army, including two tours in Iraq, Wesley Seawell was ready to go to college. He enrolled at CCCC and earned an Associate in Arts degree.

Wesley said that, because of the opportunities he had at CCCC, he was not only accepted at Campbell University, but also awarded a Presidential Scholarship. He plans to earn a degree in government.

"The education I received at CCCC helped me to show my abilities and gave me a new sense of pride and accomplishment," Wesley said. "I am well on my way to accomplishing my dreams."

CCCC scholarships change lives

Ashley Hanna almost lost her dream of becoming a nurse. She had cared for her mother-in-law and grandmother as they suffered with terminal cancer and decided that she wanted to become a nurse so she could help others. Then her husband became disabled and, with a family of three children to support, she knew her dream was over.

Her story has a happy ending. With the help of a scholarship from the CCCC Foundation, she enrolled in the college's Associate Degree Nursing program.

Hanna told her story to more than 400 scholarship donors and recipients at the CCCC Foundation Scholarship Banquet on November 18, 2008. The annual banquet enables the donors to put a face and story with their scholarship and provides an opportunity for the recipients to say "thank you."

Turning dreams into realities is what the foundation and college are all about, said President Bud Marchant.

"This is an absolutely fabulous occasion," he told the gathering. It's helping the next generation that will live and work in and guide this community. This college wouldn't be the same place if you hadn't taken it into your hearts and hands to help our students. Thank you."

The CCCC Foundation Scholarship Banquet, held Nov. 18, 2008, brought together more than 400 scholarship donors and recipients. Among those attending were Mary Lynn Keith (left), who established the J. Linwood Keith Memorial Nursing Scholarship, and Ashley Hanna, the recipient, a nursing student.

Physician honored

Dr. James "Jim" B. Holt (left), who has practiced in Chatham and Lee counties for more than 25 years, was honored by the family of two of his long-time patients with the establishment of the James B. Holt Nursing Endowment.

Dr. Holt provided long-term care for the late Elizabeth Glosson and James Walker "J.W." Thomas Jr. Their children felt that an endowed scholarship in Dr. Holt's name was the perfect way to honor their parents. Dr. Holt also finds time to serve on the college's Foundation Board.

Cynthia Cox (right) was the recipient of the first scholarship.

Division better serves workforce needs

Changing economic times and workforce education demand innovation, flexibility, and responsiveness – and the college is providing these through its Division of Economic & Community Development. It brings together departments that provide a wide range of services.

“This is ‘one-stop shopping’,” said Stelfanie Williams, vice president over the division. “We can meet needs because we’re covering all bases in workforce training.”

- Adult Education/Basic Skills offers high school and GED diplomas, English literacy, and Compensatory Education.
- Continuing Education offers a wide array of short-term workforce training programs.
- Enrollment Management assists the unemployed as they learn new job skills or continue their education.
 - The Small Business Center trains entrepreneurs to turn their business dreams into reality.
 - Industry Services provides specialized workforce training specific to industry.
 - The Emergency Services Training Center offers quality training for emergency services personnel locally and beyond.
 - Workforce Development—The college is the administrative entity for local Workforce Investment Act funds to provide job training.
 - The Dennis A. Wicker Civic Center is a valuable college, business, and community resource.

The college's Division of Economic & Community Development offers an array of programs to provide workforce and enrichment educational opportunities to adults: Adult Education/Basic Skills, Continuing Education, Workforce Development, Enrollment Management, Small Business Center, and Industry Services. It also oversees the Dennis A. Wicker Civic Center, a valuable community resource.

Creating Success

After his first visit to a dental hygienist, Mark Williamson was impressed with the results.

“I thought, ‘This is something I can do and enjoy,’” Mark said.

After nine years Army active duty, Mark enrolled at Central Carolina Community College and earned an Associate in Arts degree. He was about to enroll in a university dental hygiene program when he learned about the college’s program, which was close to home, modern, and much more affordable. He’s glad he chose CCCC.

“As dental hygiene students, we know we’re fortunate in the faculty and facilities we have for our training,” Mark said.

Creating Success

Terressa Matthews, in her 40's, out of work, and with no degree, enrolled at CCCC ready to work hard and with the desire to succeed. She earned her Associate in Arts, then graduated from Fayetteville State University and became a teacher.

"The faculty and staff at Central Carolina gave me the determination to go on," Terressa said. "My experience there gives me confidence every day to stand in front of my class."

Holly Kidd earned a bachelor's degree in Animal Science and taught several years before realizing she wanted a hands-on career with animals. That brought her to CCCC's Veterinary Medical Technology program.

"The quality of the Vet Tech program is super-duper high," Holly said. "My technical skills have grown exponentially. My education at the college directly meets my career needs and my future goals."

Heike Christian, Tom Ujfalusy, and Anthony Webb have some things in common: good jobs that disappeared, pushing middle age, and enrollment in CCCC's Electronics Engineering program.

Heike is retraining for a fourth career – the previous three disappeared with changing economic times. Each time, she returns to CCCC for excellent training to re-enter the job market.

Tom used to do carpentry, but is looking forward to a new career. Anthony was a senior manufacturing technician. Now, his goal is a degree and a good career.

"Central Carolina's electronics program is good," he said. "This training opens opportunities."

Since 2005, Shannon Baker has earned Human Resources Management, Accounting, and Business Administration degrees at CCCC. Now, she's working on University Transfer.

She juggles marriage, children, part-time work as a financial services officer, and going to school.

"I've done most of my coursework online," she said. "Online is awesome. It gives people like me a better chance to get an education."

Investing In Opportunity

A named endowment may be established at Central Carolina Community College with a minimum of $10,000.00. The initial funds, along with any additional gifts made throughout the years, remain permanently in the corpus of the endowment. An endowment becomes a perpetual source of funding for whatever the donor wishes to achieve for the good of the college and community. Scholarships and other specified awards are made from the accrued earnings and in accordance with any guidelines set forth by the endowment. If you are interested in learning more about a named endowment, please contact the CCCC Foundation at (919) 718-7231.

Creating Success

Holly Felice has two passions – art and the environment. She combines them as a metal sculpture student.

"I love working with scrap, wondering what it can be," she said. "It's inspiring rather than intimidating, because I can experiment without fear of wasting some expensive art material."

Holly is already gaining recognition for her work. She was selected to be one of the featured artists for the inaugural Scrapel Hill Art Show in Chapel Hill.

"The CCCC program is a great way to jump start an arts career," said Holly.

"The teachers give each student a lot of personal attention. I gained both the technical skills and the marketing know-how to live as an artist."

With your help – We did it!

We extend our thanks to the sponsors, players, volunteers, and Quail Ridge Golf Course employees who helped make our 19th Annual CCCC Foundation Golf Classic a success! With the help of our friends, we were able to net more than $30,000 for our award and scholarship programs. Your support is greatly appreciated!

The ball didn't stand a chance when Matt Rhodes was at the tee during the 2008 CCCC Foundation Golf Classic.

Foundation Statement of Financials

The community continued to show their support for Central Carolina Community College by contributing $275,000 in private gifts during the 2008-2009 fiscal year. These gifts included long term commitments made to the college by the establishment of four named endowments through the CCCC Foundation. In-kind gifts of equipment and supplies totaling $23,000 were also donated and transferred to the college's inventory.

During the 2008-2009 fiscal year the CCCC Foundation provided $196,000 in direct support to the college and its students. Over 160 students received financial assistance through the Foundation's scholarship and award programs totaling $115,000. Other awards totaling $81,000 were used to advance the academic mission of the college.

For more information about how you can make a difference in our community, contact the CCCC Foundation at 1-800-682-8353, ext. 7213 or via email at foundation@cccc.edu.

The Central Carolina Community College Foundation maintains a Wall of Honor in the Dennis A. Wicker Civic Center to honor donors. Diane Glover, Foundation executive director (right), and Abby Walker, Foundation administrative assistant, add new donor names to the wall.

When planning for a year, plant corn.

When planning for a decade, plant trees.

When planning for a lifetime, train and educate people.
